NAFTA 2.1: The changes Democrats (and Canada) settled on

Canada has again joined Mexico and the U.S. to sign on to the final — and this time they really mean final, apparently — text to improve the North American free trade agreement.

Mexico was the target of most of the revisions and concessions that Congressional Democrats were looking for, in return for letting the new NAFTA (officially the Canada-United States-Mexico Agreement, or CUSMA) come to a vote in Congress.

But Canada had to agree to it all anyway. And a few of the changes impact Canada directly.

Andrew Sheer steps down as Conservative leader

Andrew Scheer ended weeks of speculation on his future this past Thursday, announcing he will step down as Conservative leader.

Scheer announced his decision at a surprise caucus meeting before heading into the House of Commons to deliver a seven-minute speech ending his quest to one day become prime minister. The Tory caucus has called an emergency meeting for Thursday night.
